

(Stillwater, Okla., May 21, 2013) – Oklahoma State University's Center for Veterinary Health Sciences is reaching out to animal owners affected by the recent Oklahoma tornados.

"OSU's veterinary center is here to support the victims of the recent Oklahoma tornados," says Dr. Jean Sander, dean of the center. "We will provide needed veterinary care for animals injured during the severe storms that have hit Oklahomans so hard."

Animal owners or referring veterinarians can call OSU's Veterinary Medical Hospital in Stillwater at (405) 744-7000 to make arrangements to have their animals treated.

Donations to support this relief effort will be greatly appreciated and can be easily made online at <http://www.cvhs.okstate.edu/oarf> or by calling (405) 385-5607.
